He employs causal reasoning, demonstrating how prisons perpetuate a cycle of poverty, rather than alleviating debt. Employing Rhetorical Questions Johnson often uses questions to provoke reflection and challenge the audience: "Is it just to imprison a man for a debt he cannot pay, when his imprisonment only increases his inability?" These questions serve to undermine the legitimacy of the practice and stimulate moral introspection.

Describing the system as a "trap set for the unfortunate," which appeals to the audience's sense of justice and compassion.

Structural Elements of Johnson's Rhetorical Composition Clear and Logical Organization Johnson structures his critique systematically: Presenting the problem. Explaining its moral implications. Addressing counterarguments. Proposing moral and social remedies. This logical flow guides the reader through his reasoning, making his argument compelling and accessible.

Concise yet Powerful Language Johnson's diction is precise, often employing antithesis to highlight contrasts: "Prison for debt is a curse, not a benefit." His language embodies clarity and moral intensity, making his critique memorable.

Johnson's Moral and Philosophical Underpinnings Human Dignity and Moral Responsibility Johnson's stance is rooted in the Enlightenment ideals of human dignity and social responsibility. He believes society has a moral obligation to alleviate suffering and promote justice.

Mercy as a Virtue Johnson elevates mercy above strict adherence to the law. He argues that true justice involves compassion and forgiveness, especially for the economically vulnerable.
