Her parents, Robert Morton and Lisa Andrews, were both involved in the arts—her father a jazz musician and her mother a painter—fostering an environment saturated with creativity and artistic expression. Despite the seemingly idyllic upbringing, early reports suggest that Morton's childhood was marked by emotional turbulence and instability. In her adolescence, Morton revealed that she experienced a tumultuous relationship with her family, citing episodes of neglect and instability that shaped her worldview. Some sources suggest that her family background was more complex, potentially involving clandestine activities or undisclosed familial ties, though these claims remain unverified.

Formative Years and Education Morton attended Lincoln High School in Portland, where she was known for her artistic talents and charismatic personality. She was an active participant in drama and music clubs, displaying a flair for performance that would later define her career. Following high school, she enrolled at the University of Oregon, majoring in Fine Arts. However, her academic journey was short-lived; reports indicate that Morton dropped out after two years due to personal circumstances and a desire to pursue her artistic ambitions full-time. It was during her college years that Morton first became involved with underground art scenes and experimental theatre groups, experiences that would influence her later ventures into controversial and boundary-pushing projects.

Critics lauded her boldness, while detractors accused her of sensationalism. Nonetheless, her visibility increased, leading to features in underground art magazines and later mainstream media outlets.
